Learning the Right Lessons

By David Garcia

Whatever happened to tactical media? David Garcia, one of the genre's early formulators, takes C6's recent publication DIY Survival as an opportunity to reflect on the general state of cultural politics after its net propelled reinvention in the '90s. Concerned with the commercial cannibalisation of tactical media, he identifies a need to connect its hit and run's ephemerality with more permanent structures of resistance

Coded Utopia

By Brian Holmes

Makrolab is one of the more seminal and enduring projects to have developed out of the tactical media canon. Brian Holmes sets the project in the context of epochal shifts underway in the former Yugoslavia during its inception and fixes our vision firmly on the utopian horizon that this living laboratory probes
