Drown Them in the Canal is a new temporary, contemporary, up-to-the-minute, of-the-hour, in-the-moment project room and studio run by a group of artists, curators and one architect (of sorts) who enjoy the thrill of dialogue - which is alive - as opposed to the presentation of objects - which are, of course, dead.

For one year (not a day more or less) the project room-space-studio-forum platform-chamber-laboratory will play host to a whole host of activities including discussions, screenings, performances, debates, events, jumble sales, cribbage nights, speed dating and line dancing - a veritable orgy of happenings. Oh, did we mention happenings... and orgies.

Our inaugural programme of events are entitled pretends... Here, the leading lights of the E8 art scene will get the chance to validate flimsy practices by screening a film, or TV programme, that is altogether more serious and rigorous.

Week 2: Gordon Comstock (the invisible curator) screens a double bill of Heimat and Die Zeit Heimat.
